THE HOLSTEIN QUESTION

The Royal mail steamship Persia, Capt. Lott, which left Liverpool at 2:20 on the afternoon of the 19th, and Queenstown on Dec. 20, arrived here yesterday morning.

Her news has been fully anticipated by the Africa, which reached St. Johns, N. F., on Monday last, bringing dates to Dec. 22. Our files by this arrival, however, are three days later.

Stormy Times and Prospects—Southern Finances—Possibilities of Conquest—Effects of War and a National Debt—A Peace Panic—War in Europe—The Congress—An Insured Emperor—Ships and Guns—A Special Commissioner—The Cobden Fight—A Quick Conversion—Case of Heenan.

LONDON, Saturday, Dec. 19, 1863.

We are slowly recovering from Bunsen's disease, or Chimerapage. We are beginning to hope that it is not so bad as it seems. I think, of course, we Britons, who sympathize with all round, but especially with the children of the Chinese Emperor, whom we are helping to subdue. We sympathize with Poland, but not enough to fight for her; and we are in the same sentiment that Confederacy across the Atlantic. The prospect has been very dark for our chivalric friends. But the more sanguine of us think it just a little brighter, and the cotton stock has advanced three per cent.

The financial failure of the Richmond Government is a sore incumbrance. When a Richmond lady goes to London with a wheelbarrow full of her money to buy a bonnet, it is a pretty hard case. And it is worse, perhaps, as a symptom of the loss of faith and hope. When the people will not take the promises of a Government for ten cents on a dollar, what can be their idea of its final success? It looks as if the South were fighting now from despair rather than hope—from pride and revenge were their impulses, rather than faith in their cause or expectation of victory. It seems to make little difference whether the Federals simply advance or retreat, whether they gain or are beaten. Their territories are disintegrated, their resources are exhausted; more than all, their hope and confidence die out of them. Such are the views given by two of the most able correspondents of the English press, writing from New-York and Richmond.

Texas, it is true, other views. Most Englishmen are committed to the doctrine that such a territory cannot be conquered. But Sherman and Sheridan have conquered Chattanooga, and Sherman has conquered Chesapeake. It took a year or more, but every year gained ground, and the work was done at last. It is hard for us to see what a people can do who are conquered in the way of a country which cannot be conquered. But then the Northern Generals commenced by destroying the Valley of Virginia, which, I presume, cannot be done in a country like Texas. That would be something like taking up contributions with the aid of a Colt's revolver for the pious charity society of "Your money or your life"—but the money would be forthcoming, and life, if the war goes on with the same advantage of numbers and resources, must be beaten down to the last strongholds, and then forced to surrender.

Texas has a war, supports war, and has its own green valley. When England was engaged in the great war with Napoleon, the Bank of England suspended specie payments for twenty years. But money was dear, and wages were high, there was work for everybody, and though England came out of the war with a debt of £4,000,000,000, it has never impeded, but rather stimulated her prosperity. A great debt at home is a great element of that prosperity. Owed abroad it would be a constant drain upon the country. Owed at home it is a stimulus to industry. Not a penny of it is lost. It is like taking money from one pocket and putting it into the other. Those who pay the interest of this debt must work a little harder, and those who receive it have more capital to invest and more money to spend. The effect upon the nation has been a constant and vast accumulation of wealth. It is not debt, but capital. There can be no doubt that the wealth, power and security of England have been immensely increased by this so-called national debt; and there is more ease to apprehend that like good will not produce like effects on the other side of the Atlantic?

When the whole heart, resources, and industry of a people are engaged in a great war, it is not strange that there should be a panic at the prospect of a sudden peace. Transitions are generally painful. So great a change would involve difficulties and hardships which would follow excitement, but I see no reason why there should be a sudden collapse. There would be much to be done, even after the last Confederate army is dispersed, and the flag of the Union floats over Richmond and Atlanta, Mobile and Charleston. An army of at least two hundred thousand men will be required to occupy the reconquered territories. If a still larger one be not needed to watch the northern or southern frontier; and if a too sudden demobilization of the war is likely to cause a disorganized collapse, it will not be difficult to keep the peace politically, which there are hostile hogs and hostile men in both borders of the Republic. The advance guard of an American army is on the Rio Grande—it would, perhaps, be rash to say for what purpose. Part of it, I have read in his admonition to-morrow, may have need for it, and because there are no more worlds to conquer.

The Northern way, of course, begins with a blockade, and is to end in a target. The troops of Federal Germany are the shaves, McClernand, Schleswig. This province has a population half as large as that of New-York City. Holstein has, I believe, about the same number. Denmark, threatened by this formidable invasion, and with the loss of Slesvig province, has a population of some two and a half millions. The British Government is urged to support Denmark, but Earl Russell is committed the other way; so it is probable that King CHRISTIAN will be obliged to withdraw his forces, and submit the matter to the Congress.

And about that Congress, I hope your excellent Paris correspondent knows more about it than I do. The dog-in-the-manger attitude of England cuts me off from some desirable sources of information. The Emperor usually keeps his own secrets, only giving a hint to some of his speculating friends when to buy or sell. He may enlighten the world on New Year's. A successful Congress would isolate England from the politics of Europe, but a successful Congress is hardly possible when the great Powers prefer to settle their own questions, and are at a dead lock as to each other. There is a curious item in the papers which may have something to do with it. It is that insurances have been effected on the life of the Emperor to the amount of $1,000,000, half in English, half in French offices. What can be the cause of such an extraordinary investment? The Duke of Hamilton, who died a few months ago in Paris, had just insured in the Scottish offices for a very large amount; but he may have been gifted with second sight, and the Emperor may have had some supernatural monitions. I saw a drama the other night, in which the heroine is warned of her approaching death by her guardian angel, who stands in a lime light, dressed in white muslin, but the lady did not insure her life, as she might have done, and left her widowed mother and despairing lover independent. If the Emperor has given credence to some friendly monitions of this kind, she has also had the prudence to have something handsome for the Prince Imperial.

The chief matter of interest in England just now is the discussion of ships and guns. Englishmen in America write home in alarm the American ships and artillery, and assure their friends there that they have nothing that can cope with either. If American guns can send balls of 1,000 lbs. crashing through the sides of the Warrior, and if American monitors are impervious to Armstrong guns, it is time our friends bestirred themselves. The Times tries to put a good face on it, but I am sure, from many indications, that there is serious alarm and great dissatisfaction. The English are not at all sure of their ability to cope with either the ships or the guns now made in America. They could not attack Charleston, for example, with as powerful means as those used by the North, nor defend it as effectually as has been done by the South. When Parliament meets there will be a grand overhauling of ships and guns, and an effort to oust the favorites of the Government, and replace them with others who may be no more successful.

The war between Mr. COBDEN and the Times, or its editor, Mr. DELANE, goes on, and the whole British press seems to have taken part in it, one way or the other. When the personalities are disposed of, the real matter in controversy may appear. This is whether it is better for Englishmen to own the soil on which they labor, or pay rent to landlords. The Times contends, and it is a common opinion here, that it is better for a farmer to pay an annual rent of from one to three pounds an acre, than to invest his money in the purchase of land. The high price of land makes it a bad investment. Land is a fancy article, which pays less than the poorest stocks. The man who buys land, and then borrows money to carry it on with, pays more for interest than he would have to pay for rent. If this be true, as I think it is, in a country mostly owned by the rich, and a considerable portion of which lies in ornamental parks, forests, moors and pasture lands, kept so by men to whom a few thousand pounds income, more or less, is no object, I do not see how the poor are to obtain land, if it were desirable. Only a great social and political revolution could divide the great estates of the nobles among the people. It would be an experiment, then, of doubtful result, and it is one that neither Mr. COBDEN nor Mr. BRIGHT will have the pluck to advocate. No one can tell what may come in the future, but I think English conservatism has not been strong for a century as it is to-day, when, even such a reformer as Earl RUSSELL advises the nation to "rest and be thankful."

A curious case has occurred in London the past week, showing the rapid course of criminal procedure in some instances. A man committed a murder—killed a woman with whom he was living—on Sunday; was arrested on Monday; the inquest was held on Tuesday; he was indicted on Wednesday; brought to trial on Thursday; pleaded guilty, and sentenced, before the body of his victim had been buried. In the old times of Tyburn Tree he would have rode on his coffin from Newgate on Friday morning, and been hanged within the week. Now he will have a short time to prepare for a more quiet exit.

I ought perhaps to say a word respecting the boxing champions of our muscular Christianity—Mr. HEENAN. He is slowly recovering, and has been examined with great interest by some of the leading English surgeons. They found congestion of the lungs and a singular weakness in the action of the heart—not organic disease, but a striking debility, which they attribute to over work in training and consequent exhaustion. It is the opinion that he was in much better condition five weeks before the fight than when he stripped to meet KING. He looked a giant, but his looks deceived every one. At the third round, his strength was gone. When he fought KING, he knocked him down, or threw him down, in nearly one-half of the rounds of KING's fight. He was little out of breath, and scarcely exhausted. His friends, in a few days, recovered, and with little assistance, he was dead beat and scarcely alive. It is certain that he was entirely unfit to fight.

The truth is, that a pugilist, or athlete of any kind, should never be out of training. He should keep himself always fit for his work, and then he would run no risk of exhaustion. Years of luxury and excess cannot be made up for by a few weeks of temperance and exercise, without this liability to exhaustion and defeat—and they apply to more than prize-fighters.

THE CORDEN-DELANE CONTROVERSY.

CONCLUSION OF THE CORRESPONDENCE.

The following is said to be the conclusion of the correspondence lately pending between Richard Cobden, M. P., and Mr. DELANE, of the London Times:

To John T. Delane, Esq.:

SIR: I have received the letter dated from your private residence, and bearing your proper signature, in which you take on yourself personally the responsibility of the interpretation put by the Times on the speeches of Mr. BRIGHT and myself at Rochdale, assuming that we proposed "a division among the poor of the lands of the rich." Your letter to me says: "You attribute to the Times a deliberate misrepresentation of your meaning, and that of Mr. BRIGHT, as to the means of amending the unequal distribution of the land between the rich and the poor. I repeat that certain passages in your speeches will, in my opinion, bear no other interpretation than that ascribed to them."

This is a grave accusation. I am told that, if proved, it would bring Mr. BRIGHT and myself within the provisions of the Act 6th Geo. III., cap. 16, and render us liable to the penal consequences of transportation for seven years.

I will not believe that you can be so wanting in the respect due to others, as well as yourself, as to have addressed this accusation to me, unless with the belief that you have evidence to substantiate it.

I call on you to give the three "certain passages" to which you refer, and which are really now the only question at issue between you and me. That there may be no excuse or ground for delay, I accept the report which appeared in your paper as an accurate version of my words, and to aid you in your task, I have cut from the Times the entire passage which contains all that I said in reference to the condition of the whole people, or to the aristocracy and nation, and the land question in particular. But let it be distinctly understood, that I do not confine you to this passage, but that I give you the entire range of my speech.

Before giving the passage I will say a few words, which, although I do not in the slightest degree claim for them the character of evidence, may have interest in some quarters.

It is known that I am not in the habit of writing a word beforehand of what I speak in public. Like other speakers practice has given me an easy self-possession in the presence of an audience as if I were in my closet. Now, my one constant and ever ruling thought while addressing a public meeting, the one necessity which the long experience of the arts of controversialists has impressed on my mind, is to avoid the possibility of being misrepresented, and prevent my opponents from raising a false issue—a trick of logic as old as the time of ARISTOTLE. If I have, as some favorable critics are pleased to think, sometimes spoken with clearness, it is more owing to this ever-present fear of misrepresentation than any other cause. It is then that the most serious things in life may have their uses. When in my speech at Rochdale I came to touch upon the subject of the land, the thought instantly flashed through my brain—and none but the public speaker knows with what velocity thought moves when in the presence of 4,000 listeners—that I was dealing with a question about which there is a separation in England unknown elsewhere, and that the enemy would raise the cry of agrarianism against me, and arouse my adversaries of agrarian outrage, which will be found in the following extract. Had I been imbued with the duplicity of a Machiavel, I have foreseen the editor of the Times sitting coolly penning his criticism on my speech, I could not have more completely retraced and confounded beforehand the charge now brought against me.

"It has been a fashion of late to talk of an extension of the franchise as something not to be tolerated, because it is assumed that the mass of the people are not fitted to take a part in government, and they point to America and France and other places, and draw comparings between this country and other countries. Now, I hear that I shall not be considered revolutionary, because at my age I don't want any revolutions. They won't scare me, I am sure, at anybody else. But I have to say, I may compare very favorably with most other countries if you draw the line in society tolerably high, and if you compare the condition of the rich and the upper classes of this country, as a number, with those of the middle classes in other countries, I don't think a rich man, barring the climate, which is not very good, would be very much happier anywhere else than in England; but when my opponents treat this question of the franchise as one that is likely to bring the masses of the people down from their present state to the level of other countries, I say that I have travelled in other civilized countries, and I know the manner of the people of this country do not compare unfavorably with the manner of other countries as I could wish. I find in other countries a greater number of people with property than there are in England. I don't know of a thousand country in the world where the masses of the people are as filthy in their habits. These are not bad tests of the condition of a people. It is no use of your talking of your army and navy, your exports and your imports—it is no use telling me you have a small portion of your people exceedingly well off. What is bring the test to a comparison of the number of the people with the majority of the people in other countries, I say, filthy habits, bad habits, prevail in foreign countries, we don't compare favorably. The condition of the English peasantry has no parallel on the face of the earth. (Hear.) You have no class in Europe like that of England, which is entirely divorced from the land. Throughout the continent of the world where you will not find some land holding the plow and turning up the furrow upon their own freehold. I don't want any agrarian outrages, by which we should change all this; but this I find, and it is quite consistent with what I say, that wherever I go the condition of the people is generally regarded as more miserable and the power they have to take care of themselves; and if you have a class entirely divorced from political power, while in another country they possess it, they will be treated there with more consideration, they will have greater privileges, they will be better educated, and have a better chance of being raised from the inferiority where they are deprived of political power. (Hear.)"

You will observe in the above passage from my speech, taken from your own report, that I use the words, "I don't want any agrarian outrages by which we should change all this;" and now we must appeal to the tribunal of the lexicographers. If you turn to Webster's (quarto) Dictionary, you will find the word "agrarian" interpreted, on the authority of BURKE, as follows:

"Relating to lands. Denoting or pertaining to an equal division of lands; as the agrarian laws of Rome, which distributed the conquered and other public lands equally among all the citizens, limiting the quantity which each might enjoy."

Again, in the same dictionary the word "agrarianism" is given as "an equal division of lands or property, or the principles of those who favor such a division." Thus, in repudiating the agrarian system I repudiated in pure and unquestionable English, according to BURKE, the principles of those who favor an equal division of land. I repudiated the agrarian laws of Rome; and yet, in spite of this you charge me and Mr. BRIGHT with "proposing a division among the poor of the lands of the rich," and you associate us with GRACCHUS in schemes of socialistic spoliation. I will leave Mr. BRIGHT's case for the future, as you seem to prefer it, to his own keeping, merely observing that his remarks upon the land question were more slight and incidental than even my own, and quite as incapable of being perverted in your sense.

I must add a word with reference to the explanation I have given of what was passing in my mind when I spoke at Rochdale against agrarian outrage. In the House of Commons a speaker is allowed to put his own interpretation and meaning on his disputed utterances. This is fair in nine-tenths of the discussions. But I decline to claim or accept the benefit of this practice in the present case. There is no slander as to what I said. I accept your own version of my speech, as a mercilessly accurate report, and I adhere to it by every word of it in its simplest and most obvious meaning.

And now, having given you the above materials which I do solely to leave no ground for a prolonged correspondence, I ask whether you are prepared to adhere to the charge, that I proposed at Rochdale, on the 24th ult., to divide "among the poor the lands of the rich;" and if so, I call on you to cite those "certain passages" from my speech which you say "will bear no other interpretation." I must be allowed to remind you that it is not wholly a question of proof; that there is but one issue before us, and that any attempt to evade this issue by raising others, or entering on vague and irrelevant discussions, cannot be tolerated. I will repeat the assumption that you could not have made this grave charge without believing it to be founded in truth; that in alluding to "certain passages," you thought them to exist. I call on you to produce them in the specific form in which you would feel bound to establish your charges before a solemn legal tribunal. Unless you are still more bound to do so at that higher tribunal, the public opinion of this country, to which this correspondence will be referred. I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

R. COBDEN.

P. S.—I purposely abstained from saying a word in the body of my letter in answer to other parts of your communication, because I wished to have a distinct and categorical answer from you on the single question at issue; but, as you seem to be curious upon the subject of my allusion from your pages, I will give you a trivial historical incident. When entering on the arrangement of the details of the treaty with France, in Paris, in the Spring of 1860, I found that the Emperor arrived daily at the offices of the Commission, in Rue de l'Hôtel-de-Ville, when every faculty of my mind was employed on the work in hand. I found my efforts thwarted and opposed day after day in the columns of your journal, where the treaty was incessantly denounced, ridiculed, and misrepresented. I knew of course that the statements made in the Times were groundless; I knew that the writers could not know them to be true, and I believed then, as I believe now, that you were actuated by the mercenary fear (foolish enough, I dare say) that the abolition of the paper duty, which was contemplated as a part of the measures in connection with the treaty, would be injurious to the interests of your journal. To prevent this you appeared to be ready to destroy the treaty, deface that bridge of the year, exclaim Mr. GLADSTONE, or worry me to death. I was tongue-tied and could not speak, owing to my official position; and it was only through the confidence with which the Chambers of Commerce placed in my commercial knowledge that I was enabled to defeat your unpatriotic efforts.

I was naturally led to inquire how the Times reached the Commissioners' office, and was told that it came from home as a part of our equipment. It seemed strange enough that a Government professing to desire the success of the treaty should favor a journal which was doing its best to prevent it. Resolved that so long as I was at the head of the commission the Times should not enter the premises, I sent a communication to the proper quarter requesting that the Daily News should be substituted in its stead. This was done, and from that time the Times has never entered my house, except by accident.

To Richard Cobden, Esq., M. P.:

SIR: Having done already all that in your first two letters you seemed to think essential to your purpose, having abandoned "the shield of an impenetrable secrecy," having refused to "suppress my individuality," or to "shield myself under the third person of the editorial nominative," I might very reasonably decline to do more than acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday, and leave you to that remedy which you seemed to think all-sufficient if you could only construct a living man instead of an impersonal reality.

It appears to me, however, that I have been dragged into this correspondence entirely by the exaggerated intensity you have chosen to attach to the often-quoted phrase, "Mr. BRIGHT's proposition for a division among the poor of the lands of the rich."

The very passage to which you refer me with so much confidence conveys, in my opinion, the whole of this meaning. You seem to assume that I charged you with proposing that this division should be established by violence. But your own words were there to prove to me that such was not your meaning, and to convince me instantly if I had attempted to attach that interpretation to it. Yours are, however, as no one knows better than yourself, often and more effective, because more enduring, shafts than violence for the division of the land of the rich among the poor. We see in France, for example, the effect you described to your Rochdale audience as to democracy in England—the pulverization of the land—produced by the law of succession, which prevails there.

A similar measure proposed by yourself, or by Mr. BRIGHT, and carried in a Parliament elected primarily by the peasantry whom you desire to enfranchise, would, I believe, have the effect of "leaving a better chance of having property," which could be, for several generations not only check the accumulation of land in few hands, but would break up all existing estates, great or small, and thus largely increase the number of proprietors. In another generation, probably, the peasant himself would "turn up the furrow on his freehold," and no longer "drive cattle from the market." You suggest as obviously that it is by legislative measures—rendered possible by giving political power to the peasantry—you propose to "amend the unequal distribution of the land between the rich and the poor." I think no one would think of charging you with endeavoring to effect this great change by violence.

But if you did not desire to produce by other means that violent division among the poor of the lands of the rich, "allow me to ask, with all respect, what is the meaning and object of the passage to which you have referred me? As I write, I find that Mr. COBDEN's letter is a similar difficulty.

For myself, I can but repeat that "certain passages in your speech will, in my opinion, bear no other interpretation than that ascribed to them," and you have vainly sought the very messages upon which I rely as justify my opinion. I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN T. DELANE.

NO. 10 SOMERSET-ST., Dec. 16.

P. S.—I do not understand you mention what you call a trivial historical incident." It is of little interest to me or to the public why or when you ceased to read it. But you must allow me to remind you that the phrase is the well-remembered watchword of a party, whose interest in the abolition of the paper duty, and negotiation at Paris affected not the paper-makers, who complain, as I hear, that "ever since you made such concessions the undertaking to levy an export duty on rags, which was formerly entirely in their favor, has been the principal obstacle to the prosperity of the paper-makers." Surely it was not unbecoming a great commercial journal to remind the Minister of such neglect while there was yet time to repair it?

THE PRIZE FIGHT.

A SURGICAL REPORT ON HEENAN'S CONDITION AND INJURIES.

From the London Lancet.

As much misapprehension exists in the public mind respecting the condition of HEENAN before and after his late contest with KING, the following authentic particulars may not be without interest. Four or five hours after the termination of the fight on the 10th inst. he arrived at a friend's house in London. Mr. J. F. CLARKE saw him immediately. He was then suffering from great exhaustion. His face was considerably disfigured, and there was a cut on the right side of the upper lip about half an inch in length, which required a stitch. There were no bruises of any consequence on the chest. The action of the heart was very feeble, and the pulse extremely compressible. Sulphuric acid was resorted to, under the influence of which he gradually improved until the 12th. On the evening of that day he had a fainting fit. On the 14th Dr. ARNOTT saw him in consultation with Mr. CLARKE. He was then weak, his nights had been restless, and there was considerable uneasiness on taking a deep inspiration. On examining him all marks of shock had nearly disappeared, while the bruises upon the face were evidently quickly fading. The cut in his upper lip had healed. The right hand was recovered from its articulations; but there was no fracture. On carefully practicing auscultation, the heart's action was found to be feeble, though there was no bruit, the valves acting perfectly. The pulse was weak, very compressible, and rather above 100. The tongue was healthy; but over the spot of the right shoulder-blade, were the evident signs of congestion. On either side of the back of the neck there was considerable stiffness, which was supposed to exist chiefly in the tendinous attachments of the trapezius muscle to the occipital bone, ligamentum nuchæ, dorsal vertebræ, and spine of the scapula. The immense development of the muscles about the shoulders and chest was very remarkable. He was stated not previously, and so little improved with fat as if they had been dieted by the trainer. In Brunnen they resembled cartilage. The many conditions were also apparent in the recti muscles of the abdominal wall, the tendinous intersections (lines transversa) of which were strongly marked. But with all this splendid development it was evident that Heenan had received a shock from which his system was only slowly recovering, though whether this loss of power was due to the punishment received in the fight or to the hard training which he had previously undergone, may be a disputed point. As physiologists, it seems to us highly probable that his training had been too prolonged and too severe. When HEENAN went into training, on Wednesday, Sept. 23—just eleven weeks before the contest—his weight was 15st. 7lbs. As he stripped for the ring on the 10th inst., he was exactly 15st. 7lbs. At the same time KING weighed 12st. 7lbs., or 3 stone 4 quarters of an inch taller than HEENAN, being 5 feet 11½ inch. Those who know what severe training means will, perhaps, agree with us that HEENAN was probably in better condition for a contest before meeting his antagonist than he was on the morning of his defeat, although when he stripped for fighting the backers-of all agreed that he seemed to promise himself an easy victory, while exulting in his fine proportions and splendid muscular development. It is now clearly proved that HEENAN went into the contest with much more muscular than vital power. Long before he had met with any severe punishment—indeed, as he states at the third round—he felt faint, breathed with much difficulty, and, as he described it, his respiration was "roaring." He declares that he received more severe treatment at the hands of SAYERS than he did from KING, yet at the termination of the former fight, which lasted upwards of two hours, he was so much at ease as to leap over two or three hurdles, and distance many of his friends in the race. It was noticed on the present occasion that his physique had deteriorated, and that he looked much older than at his last appearance in the ring. Without offering any opinion as to the merits of the combatants, it is certain that HEENAN was in a state of very deteriorated health when he faced his opponent, and it is fair to conclude that deterioration was due in a great measure to the severity of the training which he had undergone. As with the mind, so with the body, undue and prolonged exertion entail an depression of power. In the process of the physical education of the young, in the training of our recruits, or in the sports of the athlete, the case of HEENAN suggests a striking commentary of great interest in a physiological point of view. While exercise promotes the development of health, excessive exertion produces debility and decay. In these times of over-excitement and over-competition in the race of life, the case we now put on record may be studied with advantage.

THE STAKES SURRENDERED.

From the London Star, Dec. 18.

On Wednesday KING received from the stakeholder his check for £1,000, a sum of £10 having been deducted for the expenses and services of the referee. The railway company received one-half of the ticket money taken, about £3,000 in all, so that there will be £1,000 to be equally divided between the men. It has been stated apparently with any place of public resort since his defeat, and the inference seems to that he will not, show for a considerable period. KING, it is said, has entered into a theatrical engagement; he is to be paid £50 per week for a nightly appearance in fighting costume.

THE REBEL COTTON LOAN.

A STATEMENT FROM COMMISSIONER M'RAE.

The following letter has been addressed to the London Times by Hon. C. J. MCRAE:

SIR: Taking advantage of its present depressed condition, the enemies of the Confederate Cotton Loan have thrown out various insinuations intended to shake the confidence of the holders. I shall be obliged to you for a space of your valuable as will enable me to reply to some of the objections raised.

In the first place, doubts have been expressed whether the Confederate Government owned the quantity of cotton requisite to redeem its bonds. This is sufficiently disposed of by the following extract of a dispatch received by me from the Hon. C. G. MEMMINGER, the Secretary of the Confederate Treasury, dated Richmond, Sept. 15. For obvious reasons, I leave two blanks.

"Your recommendation that you be permitted to make such cotton as may be asked for under the Erlanger Loan, deliverable in _____ or _____ is approved. The greater part of our cotton is in these two States, and it would be more convenient for us to make delivery in them. At present we have a sufficient quantity of cotton to meet all our engagements. The enemy, thus far, have captured about 7,000 (twenty thousand) bales, and we have been obliged to burn about as much more. But we have still vessels, over 400,000 (four hundred thousand) bales, our capacity to pay has not been seriously impaired."

Secondly, there are those who have not scrupled to say that the Confederate Government, if not actually placing obstacles in the way of the redemption of the bonds, had refused to the holders reasonable facilities for obtaining the cotton. So far from this being the truth, an arrangement has been made to relieve the holders from the risk attending the transmission of their bonds through the Union. The bonds may be deposited with the Confederate Government in London or Paris, who will give certificates of deposit in quadruplicate, and these certificates have the same validity when presented at the Treasury Department in Richmond as the original bonds themselves. It is true the Government has declined a proposition to give up to such claimants the one-third freight-room which it reserves in private vessels clearing from its ports. This is for the obvious reason that a stipulation which is justifiable only on grounds of State necessity, and on these grounds is cheerfully submitted to, would become intolerable if the exceptions accorded from one party were turned to the profit of other parties instead of the State. I do not hesitate, however, to say that bonds taken by agencies established in their own vessels will be exempted from the condition imposed on other exporters, and I have strongly recommended this to the Treasury. I can further state, with perfect assurance, that every facility for bringing the cotton to the seaport, which does not actually interfere with the necessities of military transportation, will be every where accorded to the military and civil officers of the Government to such claimants. The great interest which the Government must naturally feel in sustaining its credit in Europe is an abundant guarantee for this assurance.

You will observe, therefore, that the only reason why cotton in redemption of bonds has not come to European markets, is because the holders of the bonds have not made the effort. Up to a recent period, the impression was prevalent among them that the war would not be of much longer duration, in which case it was sound policy not to convert the bonds. The loan was, in this point of view, simply a seven per cent. sterling stock, based on the national faith, and fluctuating with the vicissitudes of the war. Its cotton basis could only come into play when it was apparent that the struggle would be protracted. Up to this time, only about £16,000 (eighteen thousand pounds) have been deposited for conversion, and the certificates were not sent forward until last November, so that sufficient time has not yet elapsed to bring out the cotton. That the blockade will not seriously obstruct this transaction on the largest scale on which it may be undertaken, is amply proved by the statistics of the Liverpool Cotton Market, from which it appears that the receipts of American cotton at that port from the 1st January last to the 1st August, amounted in round numbers to 100,000 bales, and since the 1st August to about 50,000 bales. It is plain that to be equally successful in bringing out cotton under the loan depends solely on the will of the bondholders.

A third objection is made against the loan, which, though not actually true, has yet gained force from the preceding. It is said that cotton may be purchased at the present rate of exchange cheaper in the Confederacy with sterling than with the bonds of the loan. In reply to this I have to state, that it is now under the consideration of the Government at Richmond to prohibit altogether the exportation of cotton, except such as is pledged by its obligations. I have every reason to believe that this necessary and salutary measure will promptly be adopted. The total of our obligations, other than those of the Seven per Cent. Sterling Loan, does not reach £200,000.

I remain, yours, respectfully, C. J. MCRAE,

No. 46, Avenue Gabriel, Paris, Dec. 18.

DEFAULT OF A SPECULATOR.

From the London Herald, Dec. 17.

There was a failure in the market for foreign securities the party in question having operated largely in the various descriptions. Owing to his declaration not having taken place at the usual time, he having hoped to pull through, some confusion was created late in the day. Notwithstanding he had had a very large account open in Confederate Stock, Mexican, and other of the speculative classes, it was not suspected he was in an unsound position, and therefore he was enabled to sustain full credit till the last instant. His heaviest engagements are with the most wealthy of the brokers, and it is said there is the prospect of a very respectable dividend. The individual in question was once before in this unpleasant dilemma, but then he liquidated his engagements in full, and was immediately readmitted to the house.

The Stock of the Confederate Loan was not largely dealt in. At the commencement of business the price was 33 to 35, but after the announcement of the defaulter above alluded to, the quotation was 30 to 32.

PAYING UP.

From the London Times, Dec. 18.

It is understood that the amount is in hand for the sinking fund to be applied to the extinction of 33½ per cent. of the Confederate loan on the 1st of March next.

THE NEW REBEL ENVOY TO FRANCE.

Mr. SLIDELL, who had arrived in Paris in the character of "Special Envoy from the Confederate States," is a Frenchman by birth, and was formerly an advocate in the south of France. He has been living in Texas for the last 17 years, and is now a naturalized American. He got away from Matamoras on board a French ship of war, which the Admiral lent him to go to Vera Cruz, where he embarked in the French steamer Florida for St. Nazaire. He is said to have a mission to notify to the French Government the recognition by the Confederate States of the Empire of Mexico, and also to try to persuade NAPOLEON to recognize the South to return.

BLOCKADE RUNNING.

PAY OF THE CAPTAINS.

From the Liverpool Times.

The commander of a blockade-runner usually gets £300 a round trip from Bermuda or Nassau, and the privilege of purchasing 12 bales of cotton for £10 a bale, which is worth £75 at Liverpool. It is only possible to make one trip during a moon from Bermuda, but two could be made from Nassau. The risk to the commander is fearful, as the Federal cruisers are most dangerous to encounter. The instructions to commanders of blockade-runners are to sink their ships rather than let them be captured by the Federals. Each blockade-runner is well provided with boats which can be lowered in a moment. These boats are provided with rowing and steerage gear, and with ten days' provisions. When there is no chance for the escape of the ship at night, the crew scuttle her and escape, if possible, in the boats; before the Federals can board the scuttled ship she is very often waterlogged or sunk.

IRISH ENLISTMENTS.

From the Cork Examiner, Dec. 17.

The Kearsage affair seems interminable in its investigations. At the conclusion of the last investigation, held on Saturday, three men were returned their private baggage, hitherto detained by the Customs, but they have since been warned that their presence will be again required. Beyond this the result of the many inquiries has not transpired.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The European News says:

"The Queen continues to be oppressed with the terrible loss she sustained in the death of the Prince Consort. The second anniversary of her bereavement was passed on the 14th inst. in deep seclusion. A religious service took place early in the morning in the Royal Mausoleum, at Frogmore, attended by Her Majesty and several of her children, who placed on the tomb wreaths of evergreens and immortelles. Her Majesty makes frequent visits to the mausoleum, and the custom, as general in France and other continental countries, of paying these honors to the memory of the departed, seems likely, from this high example, of being introduced into England."

The Insurance Record observes that several offices in London are accepting proposals for an insurance to a large amount on the life of the Empress of the French. The risk is being divided amongst French and English offices, and the total amount of insurance is £500,000.

The Velasco steamer, captured by Federal cruisers off Matamoras, was insured in London for £50,000.

It is rumored that Cardinal WISEMAN intends to resign, in consequence of ill-health.

Mr. BRIGHT was expected to deliver an address at Birmingham, about Christmas.

THE HOLSTEIN QUESTION.

The Paris Moniteur, speaking of the proclamation of the King of Denmark, recalling soldiers on furlough, says: "Private dispatches, however, continue to affirm that Denmark will not oppose in arms the Federal troops undertaking the execution. She will only continue to occupy the 'tête depont' of Rendsburgh and Fredericstadt, which are upon Holstein territory." It is said that the superior officers in Holstein had been informed that every functionary should remain at his post, and should place himself at the disposal of the Federal Commissioners.

In the Prussian Chamber of Deputies Herr VON BISMARK made some vague explanations as to Prussian policy in the Holstein question, and spoke in rather a threatening tone. Notwithstanding his appeal to the House, the address to the King, in which the loan is refused, was adopted by a vote of 207 to 107.

Telegraphic Connection.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 31.

Mr. B. F. SHERMAN, the enterprising manager of the American Telegraph office in this city, was to-day presented by the employes of the Company here, with a service of silver, as a mark of their esteem. After the presentation, a sumptuous entertainment was served up at the National Hotel, at which the press and the telegraphic fraternity were well represented, and numerous speeches were made, and the utmost good humor prevailed.

Arrivals in the City.

Col. John S. Crocker and the field and line officers of the Ninety-third New-York Veterans, arrived at the Astor House yesterday afternoon. J. B. Haycock, Esq., Philadelphia, and Lieut. Ed. Bennett, of the Forty-fourth N. Y. Vols., are also at the Astor House.

Col. H. G. Brooks, New-York; Major H. B. Noyes, United States Army; H. Blanchenessis, Boston; D. H. Holmes, Paris; J. Cambies, New-Orleans, and Geo. H. Elliott, Philadelphia, are at the Metropolitan Hotel.

IMPORTANT FROM ALBANY.

Removal of the Police Commissioners.

The Reasons Therefor as Assigned by Gov. Seymour.

ALBANY, Thursday, Dec. 31.

Gov. SEYMOUR takes the ground that since their answer to the charges made against them, there were good grounds for their removal; but he was unwilling to make any change during the excitements of the past season; but that the official report lately made to him by the Commissioners, about the riots in July, is sectarian and partisan, and shows that the Commissioners have departed from the impartial and dispassionate position of public officers, and lost their usefulness. The passage complained of is as follows:

"These violent proceedings had a political design and direction, and received encouragement from newspapers and partisans of influence and intelligence. The Board of Police had been threatened with summary removal, which was expected to ensue immediately. Members of the force desired the removal, and there were striking instances of insubordination—the test of the disposition of a large portion of the force were of the same sectarian and political and religious faith of the riotous mob."

The charter of the Albany City Bank, Richard Cousins, President, expired to-day, and the bank has reorganized under the General Banking Law, with the same stockholders and officers. It was chartered in 1824, has divided regularly four per cent. semi-annually, and closes with eighty per cent surplus.

In the case of the Bank of America against the New-York Commissioners of Taxes, the Court of Appeals has decided that so much of the capital as is invested in United States securities is not taxable, thus sustaining the law of Congress and the decision of the United States Supreme Court.

IMMENSE DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY BY AVE HELL'S RAID.

An officer of General AVERRY's command writing to a friend here says that the damage inflicted on the rebels in the recent raid could not be repaired for less than five millions of dollars. The destruction of tanneries on the route traversed he says will prove an irreparable loss to them. Immense quantities of leather were destroyed.

Whereas, Brigadier-General Michael Corcoran, the gallant, honest and patriotic soldier of the Democratic faction, is no more. He was killed accidentally near Fredericksburg, Central Virginia, on Tuesday, the twenty-second instant; and

Whereas, The wise dispensation of an over-ruling Providence, thus mystically manifested, should remind us of the words, "Man proposes, but Deity disposes;" that yesterday, in full vigor of manhood, in the enjoyment of health and vigor—one whom all delighted to honor for his devotion to his adopted country. To-day he is an inhabitant of the cold and silent tomb. But yesterday, as it were, he was marshaled in triumphant array, at the head of a host of his City, the guest of its municipal authorities, the object of their praise, and the idol of the patriotic citizenship; his path strewn from captivity in Richmond; to-day all that remains to us is the history of his sacrifices for and disinterested endeavors to serve in behalf of the Union, together with our recollections of his private worth and virtues; particularly a rich inheritance—one in which every lover of liberty and his fellow-man, and every fervent lover of freedom in all parts of the world, has a natural inheritance; and

Whereas, The distinguished military services of the deceased, and his exertions and indefatigable labors in the cause of his country, were of such a character as to entitle him, in more than an ordinary degree, to the consideration of this Common Council. He was among the first to offer his services and the services of the gallant regiment then under his command, (the immortal Sixty-ninth,) to the Government, at the inauguration of hostilities, and, at the first battle of Bull Run—in which his regiment actively participated, and by its valor and heroism, earned for him, as its commander, undying fame—he was severely wounded and taken prisoner. He suffering long and severe captivity in Richmond, and upon being released by exchange, was commissioned a Brigadier-General—recruited the "Corcoran Legion," composed of five regiments—proceeded a second time to the seat of war, where he has been actively and honorably engaged until the week of preparation for the rebellion of the Southern States against the integrity of the Union, until the melancholy event occurred that forever deprives the country of an experienced and courageous soldier; be it, therefore,

Resolved, That the Common Council have learned with feelings of profound regret of the death of Brigadier-General Michael Corcoran, and we hereby tender to the family of the deceased patriot and soldier our heartfelt sympathy and condolence in their affliction.

Resolved, That the Committee on National Affairs of both branches of the Common Council be, and they are hereby authorized and directed to make all the necessary arrangements for paying the last tribute of respect to the mortal remains of the deceased; and, third, that the Clerk of the Common Council be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to cause a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions to be suitably engrossed and framed, and transmitted to the family of the deceased.

Which was adopted.

By Alderman Farley—

Resolved, That permission be given to Earl & Bartholomew to deliver and receive goods in front of their premises, number one hundred and ninety-six Greenwich-street, during the pleasure of the Common Council.

Which was adopted.

By Alderman McCool—

New-Year Day.

In accordance with the custom of observing to-day as a holiday there will be no editions of THE TIMES this afternoon, and no morning issue to-morrow. On Saturday, at 1 o'clock P. M., we shall publish an edition, and another at 3 o'clock.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The New Year opens quiet upon all the armies. From none of them do we get even a paragraph of news. Winter quarters and holiday amusements are the chief features of present campaigns.

Our Washington correspondent telegraphs that orders have been issued by the War Department postponing the draft until the 15th of January.

Two rebel captains, HARNESS and MIX, and eleven privates, were captured by the Eighth Iowa cavalry, in Hickman County, Tenn., and were taken to Nashville on Wednesday. A rebel lieutenant was killed. The dirty guerilla prisoners here represent eighteen different commands. They are deserters and desperadoes.

The Boston Gazette learns through an authentic channel that the colored prisoners taken at Wilmington were turned over to the State authorities of North Carolina, and tried before the courts and sentenced, but pardons shortly prevailed, and the prisoners were sent to the city jail, where they now are, subject to as good treatment as the white soldiers who are in captivity, and are as safe probably.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Board of Aldermen yesterday received and referred to a Special Committee a communication from the Commissioners of Health, stating that there has been a great increase of malignant fevers in certain localities of the City, and recommending that an ordinance be passed compelling some more efficient system of ventilation in tenement houses. The Board concurred in the substitute resolutions of the Council Board requiring the Eighth-avenue Railroad Company to run cars regularly up to Eighty-fourth-street. They also concurred in appointing over two hundred Commissioners of Deeds to fill vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of as many of those officers. They further concurred to increase the pay of the pavers and laborers employed by the Croton Board to $2 per day. The Board adjourned to 11 o'clock A. M. on Saturday.

The Board of Councilmen met at 12 o'clock M. yesterday. Their session was very brief, and beyond the appointment of a list of Commissioners of Deeds, numbering 210 names, reported by the Committee on Salaries and Offices, the business transacted was unimportant. The Board adjourned to 11 o'clock on Saturday. Immediately after the adjournment, there was a reunion of all the members and attachés of the Board in the large Committee-room in the basement, where an inviting collation was spread, arranged under the superintendence of Mr. GEORGE W. BOWEN, keeper of the City Hall. Preceding the enjoyment of the feast, Mr. SAMUEL F. WHEEDEN, on behalf of his colleagues of the Board and its attachés, presented to the President, MORGAN JONES, Esq., a splendid Jurgensen chronometer gold watch, with a heavy and beautiful neck-chain attached, as a testimonial of personal regard to the recipient. Mr. WHEEDEN'S remarks were brief, pointed, and happy, and Mr. JONES' response was short, and evinced deep feeling at so unanimous an expression of hearty good will toward him. The watch bears a suitable inscription in words, and also the City coat-of-arms, beautifully engraved. The present cost over $300. The occasion was in all respects of the most pleasant character.

The Board of Supervisors of 1863 held their last meeting yesterday, when the resolution in favor of asking the Legislature to increase the salaries of the Police was adopted. New Court-house bills to the amount of $40,000 were passed. Resolutions complimentary to the President, Mr. LEWIS, Esq., and to AUGUSTUS WHEEMAN, the only retiring member of the Board, were presented and adopted, after complimentary remarks by Mr. TWEED and others. Both the President and Mr. WHEEMAN made feeling responses. Mr. Alderman HENRY SMITH succeeds Mr. WHEEMAN. A resolution by Mr. TWEED was unanimously adopted, requesting Mayor OPDYKE to act as an auxiliary member of the Volunteer Committee after the expiration of his term of office. At a meeting of a portion of the Board of District Court Clerks, held yesterday, appointments of City Marshals, under the law of 1863, were sent to by the Mayor, and were confirmed. We publish the names of the appointees elsewhere. The Board for 1864 meet at noon on next Monday.

Mayor OPDYKE has suddenly removed the Police Commissioners of this City, and appointed in their places Ex-Judge BOSWORTH, Mr. WILLIAM MCMURRAY, of this City, and Wm. B. LOCKE, of Brooklyn. The grounds for the removal are stated to be the "partisan and sectarian character" of their late report upon the draft riots in this City. The Governor says that though there were sufficient grounds for their removal before the condition of their report, he was unwilling to do so during the prevalence of the excitement of the past season. But the record of indubitable facts presented by the Commissioners, seems to have induced the Governor to attempt this removal. His action is dependent upon the concurrence of the Senate.

To those who have much of the vote of each State in rebellion will be necessary to form the one-tenth required for the formation of Loyal State Governments under the President's Proclamation, the following table is given:

Virginia and North Carolina are not included in the table, because the latter never seceded, and the former, except by Legislature.

The controversy of ten years' duration between the Hoadley and Westervelt and the Worthington Gas-light Companies, concerning the division of joint business, has been amicably settled upon terms mutually satisfactory, between the President of the two corporations, Messrs. GERRIT TWITMEYER and GERSHOM W. CHAPIN, without the intervention of any third parties. The settlement covers all points in dispute, and liquidates all arrearages and balances.

The famous trotting mare, California Damsel, recently purchased by Senator SPRAGUE, of Rhode Island, for $11,000, as a present for his bride, died from the bursting of a blood vessel. She was let out of the stable in the morning in quite vigorous health, and commenced frisking about when she fell suddenly dashed from her mouth, and she soon died.

A letter dated Morris's Inlet, S. C., Dec. 6, has been received at Boston, giving an account of the capture of three officers and fifteen men belonging to the United States brig Perry, a brief mention of which was made by telegraph. Among the officers was Acting-Assistant-Paymaster Geo. W. BURBERY, of East Boston. The letter states that on the 5th inst., two boats manned with volunteers put off to burn a schooner which was in the inlet. One boat's crew had hardly got on board the schooner when about two hundred rebel cavalry came out of a piece of woods near by and attacked them, and they were all killed or taken prisoners. The Captain's son was among the number. The other boat's crew, which remained in their boat, escaped.

The British officer, Lieut. BOOKS, who was arrested here on Tuesday, had letters in his trunk to MUMMINGER, MALLORY and other traitors at Richmond.

Bermuda papers have been received, but they contain no items of interest.

The Stock market was firm yesterday. Money continued in good request among the Brokers at 7 per cent. Gold steady at 161½@163 per cent.

Breadstuffs were less active yesterday, and prices generally heavy. A fair business was reported in provisions at about previous rates. Groceries were quiet. Cotton was depressed and lower. Whisky was more active. The changes in other articles were unimportant.

As usual at the end of a year, we have prepared, and now present to our readers in our general market report, a series of very interesting comparative tables of prices of the leading articles of domestic produce and general merchandise at the close of each of the last two years.

The Armies and Finances of the South—The Sources of Military Power.

The picture of what the South has to become in order to succeed in its rebellious struggle, which was traced a few days ago in the rebel Senate by Mr. BROWN of Mississippi, is worth studying as one of the most remarkable attempts on record to embody despair in legislation. In the first place, a tax of some kind has to be levied, which will reduce the currency by $500,000,000, and which will supply $400,000,000 for the expenses of government during the coming year—nine hundred millions in all—and it must be raised during the coming six months in order to be of any use. This would, we need hardly say, be a burden which would cause the pillars of any State in the world to tremble to their base, even in time of profound peace, with resources still untouched and confidence still unshaken.

In the next place, Mr. BROWN proposes to turn society upside down by an experiment—the like of which has never yet been seen. In the ordinary condition of civilized countries, the rule is that the male population is engaged in civil pursuits, while details are made from them to do the work of soldiering. The statesmen of the Confederacy propose to try the converse of this—place all men in the army, and make details for all other occupations. This amounts, or will amount in practice, to an attempt on the part of the Government to convert the whole country into a camp, and to take entire charge of its affairs, just as the War Department takes charge of those of an army, provides its food, its clothing, keeps its quarters in repair, and arranges its transport. If this be the only way in which the Confederacy can be saved, then there is nothing more certain than that its doom is sealed, and its destruction as certain, within the next two years at the very furthest, as any political event ever is or can be.

There is no maxim of government better settled, than that the force and capacity for endurance of a country in war, depends not so much on the number of men it can put into the army, as on the extent to which it can leave civilians free and undisturbed in the pursuit of their ordinary avocations. If it can carry on the war in such fashion as to leave complete liberty to private enterprise, to avoid all interference with trade and commerce, there is hardly any limit to the power of resistance of even nine or ten millions of men really in earnest. It is to the fact that England, with her insular situation and command of the sea, has in all her wars been able to enjoy this advantage in a very high degree, that she owes that capacity for holding out, which, far more than the size of the force she has ever been able to put into the field, has secured her her present high position in Europe. And it is, as we all know, to the small extent to which the war has made itself felt in the seats of industry at the North, and to the unremitting liberty to exhaust his own interest which every civilian has, that we are indebted for the enjoyment of such extraordinary vigor at the close of over two years of hostilities on a great scale.

It is not, as is often supposed, the want of men, so much as the want of means of feeding and clothing them, that brings wars to an end in our day. The effect of the loss of life caused by campaigning on the population of any country, let its armaments be on ever so great a scale, is greatly exaggerated in the popular notions on this subject. There probably have never in history been such drains on the population as that caused by the wars of NAPOLEON on the population of France, and yet it was calculated that NAPOLEON might have embodied 600,000 men in the first year of his wars, and drawn 150,000 every year afterward, for ten years, and yet the annual number of marriages would have increased by 10,000 every year. He did draw far more largely than this, and yet he brought into the field at Waterloo, after twenty years of incessant and murderous warfare, one of the finest armies that ever stood in line, and left France, at his fall, one of the richest, strongest and most flourishing kingdoms in the world. If he had, however, undertaken to "detail" soldiers to carry on the ordinary business of civil life, even his organizing genius would not have saved him from an early and ignominious overthrow; and where he would have failed, we may feel quite satisfied that the Mommingers and Northrops of the South are not likely to succeed.

The problem to be solved in protracting a war, is, therefore, not so much how to get men into the field, as how to keep them there, and the experience of mankind shows that whatever state of things best helps to make a State rich, is that best calculated to supply an army with food and clothing; and we all know that it is on the way of facilitating wealth in a country as good as letting everybody carry on his own business as he pleases.

We predict, therefore, with entire confidence, that the attempt to convert the South into a camp by legislative enactment, will be the signal for the final débâcle, and that it will hasten the result we all so much desire, better than anything that could possibly occur—better even than the most brilliant victories that our armies could achieve. Human nature has not been changed for the benefit of the Confederacy, and as long as it remains as it is, the measures proposed by Mr. BROWN will, if an attempt is made to carry them out, at once enormously diminish production, enormously increase the existing want of confidence, and thus aggravate every one of the difficulties with which the rebel Government is contending. The bringing in of recruits to the army will be a mockery as long as they can only be fed by legalized plunder, carried on over half a continent; and as to the notion that any value can be made to attach to the bonds or notes of a Government which is carrying on all the private business of the country by "details" from the army, it could only have entered into the heads of men whom Providence was bent on destroying.

We do not, therefore, we are satisfied, lay ourselves open to the charge of over-confidence, when we express our belief that the United States Government at last has the whole Confederate concern in its grasp, and that the year in which we are entering will furnish history with a new and splendid illustration that the sinews of war are still to be found in the workshop, the mill, and the counting-house, and nowhere else; and that vigorous trading is the best preparation for vigorous fighting.

Troublesome Questions Between England and the United States.

We see it stated, from Washington, that Lord LYONS is having long interviews with the State Department during these days, probably in reference to the case of the Chesapeake. We can very well believe it, for there are certainly some knotty points of international law in the case. It would require some discussion probably to come to a clear and satisfactory conclusion on the question whether the vessel herself shall be given up to our authorities or to her owners, for that involves, doubtless, the question whether the pirates who captured her were acting under a regular commission from Jeff. DAVIS or not. If they were not, the case was one of pure piracy. But if they were, the question of recognizing the capture as legal, is one on which the British Government and our own would be very likely to take different views. Yet even if we accept the view which the English would be apt to take, and allow the capture to be a lawful one, according to their views of belligerency, what can they do with the vessel? She has never been condemned in any Prize Court. She has been recaptured by our vessels, although in British waters, and by us put into the hands of the British authorities. They would hardly go so far as to put the vessel into the hands of the pirates again, if they were impudent enough to make a claim for her. Probably the best way for England to settle it will be, to say, "We will not discuss any of these troublesome questions of lawful capture, &c. All we know about it is that you have put into our hands a vessel, which you say is yours, and which you want us to give back to you; and so, to avoid trouble, we will give her to you. As for the wrongful act, which you have been guilty of in seizing her within our waters, we will, under the circumstances, overlook that. That is a matter which concerns us alone, and JEFF. DAVIS has no just cause of complaint against us for avoiding a quarrel."

Then there will come an explosion of rage from Richmond against England for not being willing to fight us, which, in view of the reports of the decaying state of things there by the correspondent of the London Times, will be received with more indifference than they would have been before, and that will probably be the end of the Chesapeake case.

If, however, beside the question of the vessel, the surrender of any of the pirates is claimed by our Government of the English authorities as being guilty of piracy and murder on an American vessel, on the high seas, then some of these questions, which may be avoided in the case of the vessel, will have to be met. They will, in that case, probably come up for decision first before the Colonial Courts, and we may have our turn in finding fault with English Courts and Judges.

But these are not all the international questions to be decided by the two Governments. There is another case out of which equally complicated questions must arise for decision. We refer to the case of the Saxon, captured by the Vanderbilt at the Penguin Islands, on the coast of Africa, and which has lately arrived here as a prize. As we understand the facts of the case, the Saxon was sent by English merchants, at the Cape of Good Hope, who had supplied the Alabama with coal, &c., to those islands to get their pay in the shape of the cargoes of the Conrad and the Sea Bride, American vessels captured by the Alabama, and which she had sent to those islands there to discharge their cargoes. The Saxon, which was a British ship, had taken on board nearly a full cargo of this American property from the islands, when the Vanderbilt came along and snapped her up, and sent her here with a prize crew on board.

As will be very readily seen, there are various questions which must arise in this case. First, we understand there is a question whether the capture was made within the jurisdiction of England or not. If she owned the islands, then it was within her jurisdiction, as we see is claimed by the English papers; and if she did own them, where excuse can she offer for allowing captured American property, [illegible] by any Neutral Government, that [illegible] was captured by Capt. SEMMES in his own cruise, to be landed upon her soil, and there traded in by her subjects? Or if the islands were not her own, can she exercise of the capture of one of her vessels which engaged in such a business? Again, if the capture was within her waters, what right had the Vanderbilt to make such a capture of a British ship? And after she had made it, why did she not, as was done in the case of the Chesapeake, take the Saxon to a British port, and deliver her to the authorities, to be by them delivered to us, if they thought we were in the right?

There is another question, too, about it. In an affray on board the Saxon, after she was captured, her First Mate was killed by a pistol shot. Shall there be any judicial inquiry into the cause of his death? Shall the man who fired the shot be tried for murder, and if so, before what tribunal, an English or an American one?

All will admit that here are matters enough for interminable discussion, and which will call for all the wisdom, and patience and skill which the repositories of both Governments can furnish. We are happy to feel confident that, judging from the past, our Government will not be found wanting in them.

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS.—A great many young men will doubtless be making new resolutions to-day as to their course of life for the coming year. We do not propose to offer any elaborate advice upon the subject; but if any unencumbered patriot under forty-five finds difficulty in deciding as to the noblest purpose to which he can put his time and powers, we are sure that we can in a single word indicate for him a course in which he will not go astray. Enlist. Your country will need your services during the coming year, and on no day can the resolution better be made to enter her service than on this its opening day. If any stimulus other than patriotism be needed, remember the rich bounties that are offered to volunteers, but which will only be offered for a few days longer. The fact that so many thousands of our old soldiers are reenlisting shows that a year or two of campaigning is not such an intolerable thing as some sweet-eys have imagined. Richmond, Raleigh, Charleston, Atlanta, Montgomery and Mobile must be taken this year. With this done, the rebellion will be pretty much done, and the great republic will again smile with in peace, freedom and glory, with the Stars and Stripes waving defiantly across the continent and on every sea. No one could better spend the year than in struggling bravely for this consummation.

OUR ARMY IN EAST TENNESSEE.—It has always been a serious question how an army holding Knoxville, and the surrounding portion of East Tennessee, could be supplied after the supplies in the vicinity had given out. To haul them by wagon through Eastern Kentucky, via Nicholasville and Cumberland Gap to Knoxville, a distance of two hundred miles, over a mountainous, desolate, and dangerous region, seems an impossible task, yet Gen. BURNSIDE obtained in this way a very large portion of his supplies. This route, however, is to be abandoned; and Gen. FOSTER'S army is to be supplied, indeed, is already being supplied by the Tennessee River from Bridgeport, via Chattanooga. The river is in good boating condition from Bridgeport to Loudon, thirty-five miles south of Knoxville. From Loudon to the latter place the supplies are forwarded by rail. Thus the supplies of this army only reach their final destination through a circuitous route, which, beginning at Louisville, measures the distance of four hundred and fifty miles before reaching Knoxville. It is wonderful that there is energy enough even in Gen. GRANT'S Department to accomplish such Herculean labors. Gen. FOSTER will put in complete order the entire railroad from Morristown, forty-five miles northeast, to Chattanooga, one hundred and ten miles southwest of Knoxville. But Gen. FOSTER will not be entirely dependent on this route for supplies. In many of the secluded valleys of East Tennessee there is yet a large quantity of forage and wheat which is being drawn out by our forces. The wheat is ground by the numerous mills now doing good flour service, and the question of supplies for the army in East Tennessee seems to be permanently solved.

A DESPERATE REBEL CHIEF.—The rebel Senator BROWN, of Mississippi, made a notable speech in the Richmond Congress, on Thursday of last week, which we gave yesterday. He said that the two greatest needs of the Confederacy were, to strengthen its army and improve its currency, and that the great question now was, shall the Confederacy stand or fall? He proposed to strengthen the army by declaring every white male person residing in the Confederate States, capable of bearing arms, to be in the military service. He said he would take all, without reference to age or occupation—Jews and Gentiles, Christians and infidels, citizens and foreign residents, the members of Congress, the Governors of States, and even the President of the Confederacy—not excepting exempts or those who had furnished substitutes. He would "pick them all up, and poke them into the army." He then declared that the South was a free country—that they "did not live under a Constitution which required them to sacrifice their liberties"—that "if he had taken an oath to support such a Constitution, he would disregard it"—all of which was in excellent keeping with his previously expressed policy. If the rebels did not adopt his measures, the Confederacy would be brought to destruction.

Senator BROWN—this fire-eating, bloodthirsty rebel conspirator, who has for years been the willing salaberer of Jeff. DAVIS in "firing the Southern heart," and "precipitating the South into revolution" and ruin—at the close of his speech cursed our [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

FORTRESS MONROE, Wednesday, Dec. 28.

The officers of the Russian fleet visited Newport's News and other points of interest in this vicinity, to-day, on the steamer C. W. Thomas, Capt. WALL.

Two men of the New-York mounted rifles, named [illegible] Rosman and —— BRANNAN, who deserted to the rebels and served with them some time, came into our lines some weeks ago as refugees, and were about to take the oath, when they were detected, tried by Court-Martial, and sentenced to be shot to-morrow, and were working their executions in jail at Yorktown.

[illegible] escape by sawing off the iron bars of a window with a knife. The Provost-Guard searched for them all night, and finally believed, this morning, that they had been set across the river by some negroes two miles above Yorktown, and they must now be within the rebel lines.

FROM NEWBERN.

NEWBERN, N. C., Sunday, Dec. 27.

The North Carolina Times says a five-dollar gold piece sustained at auction for $150 in Confederate money at Danville, a few days since.

The same paper heartily indorses President LINCOLN's recent Proclamation, and advises the people of the State to accept it. It also copies and indorses a remarkable article from the Richmond Whig, which concludes the following significant paragraph:

"Slavery has stripped itself to death. It has almost exhausted the light, consumed the unprofitable material of war."

The Raleigh Standard and the Raleigh Progress are very severe in their criticisms on Jeff. Davis' message. They publish President LINCOLN's Message and Proclamation, with favorable comment.

The North Carolina Times says the British subjects, J. C. Stevens, which was captured by the United States transport Fulton, and then recaptured, made out into Smithville, near Wilmington, unloaded her cargo, and was about to run the blockade in ballast, when the vessel caught and burnt by one of the United States steamers.

The health of this department is good. The weather is cold and pleasant.

Heavy Storm West.

The snow is drifting so that several railroads are completely blockaded up. The storm is reported to be more severe in Iowa.

METROPOLITAN FAIR.

UNITED STATES SANITARY COMMISSION.

A Metropolitan Fair is to be held in the Metropolitan City of New-York, commencing 22d of March, next, for the relief of the sick and wounded of the National Army. It is designed to be something much larger than a "fair" in the modern acceptation of that term. Every branch of agriculture, trade, industry and art, will be invited to contribute its choicest and costliest products for exhibition and sale. Musical and dramatic artists will be invited in all the resources, each with their talent and genius. All the material resources of the great City of New-York and of the nation directly tributary to it, are to be invoked. The farmers of New-York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, New-Jersey, and the adjacent States, will send in specimens of their finest stock; our factories will contribute locomotives, grand pianos, sewing machines, steam plows and all the mechanical products of Northern intelligence and industry, in aid of the great cause of National Unity.

Surely there that can give anything or produce anything that will furnish the means of succoring our national troops and hospitals will make itself tributary to a great "National Exposition" for purposes not of mere speculation, but of substantial aid to the country.

Two Committees—one of ladies, and another of gentlemen—have been appointed to carry out this undertaking. You are invited personally to cooperate in it, or, if you cannot do so, to give it the influence of your name, exemple and position. By a "Fair" we mean, as we contemplate it in New-York, Chicago has just raised nearly sixty thousand dollars for army relief. This sum may well serve to the nation the lives of ten thousand soldiers. Who can tell what these may be worth in diminishing the current duration of the war?

Boston has already realized one hundred and forty thousand dollars, through her "Fair," and Cincinnati is doing the same thing, with every promise of a result equally splendid. Cannot and should not the City of New-York, and the wealthy region of which it is the centre, do more for this great national object than Cincinnati or Boston, or than all these together?

We confidently rely on your aid, and call on you for it without hesitation or apology. We apply to you in the interest of no party, Radical or Conservative, Republican or Democratic, Administration or Anti-administration. To all these shades of opinion we are strangers. We know only this, that to send surgical aid to the field supplies to supplement those Government undertakes to give them, but which they sometimes fail to receive, and there to relieve them when sick and in misery is a work of Christian charity, and that it is a work of intelligent patriotism, also, to economizing their life, health, and efficiency, on which, under God, the nation depends in this its time of trouble.

We, therefore, ask every clergyman to announce this humane undertaking to the people, and to advise them to do what they can to further it. We ask the press to give it the widest publicity and the most earnest encouragement. We call on every workshop, factory and mill for a specimen of the best thing it can turn out; on every artist, great and small, for one of his creations; on all loyal women for the exercise of their taste and industry; on farmers for the product of their fields and dairies. The miner, the naturalist, the man of science, the traveller, can each send something that can, at the very least, be converted into a blanket that will warm, and may save from death, some one soldier whom Government supplies have failed to reach. Every one who can produce anything that has money value is invited to give a sample of his best work, as an offering to the cause of National Unity. Every loyal and patriotic professional mechanic or farmer who can make a pair of shoes or raise a barrel of apples, is invited on to contribute something that can be turned into money, and again from money into the means of succouring the health and the life of our national soldiers.

Contributions for the invited for temporary loan and exhibition. Connected with the Fair will be a Museum of Paintings, Statuary, Ancient Furniture, Autographs, Articles of Vertu, and Curiosities of every class. They will be on exhibition during the Fair and fully protected against injury.

These contributions, whether loans or donations, should be consigned to Mrs. ALFRED SCHERMERHORN and Mrs. ALEXANDER HAMILTON, Jr., No. 5 Great Jones-st., who is also nominated for expenses of printing and advertising, express charges, freight, &c., &c. Contributions of money should be sent to Mrs. ELLEN E. STRONG, Treasurer of Metropolitan Fair, No. 3 Great Jones-st., New-York.

Martinie's Gold Pens are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced sliding, his business was done on Credit and already with the Trade.

The Merton Gold Pens are the only pens sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Merton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Merton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Prices of everything, you can have a Merton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon Hand material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword." In another column.

Chloasma, or Moth Patches.

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discoloration appears in the skin never more obviously on blonds than in brunettes, but the pain is more greatly in marring the beauty so much admired by the sex, and anything that will remove Moth Patches without injuring the skin in texture or color, must be a great boon to the fair. Dr. H. C. PERRY, having demonstrated the whole pain and expense in Europe of the Elder, will continue to remove Moth Patches, Freckles, and other discolorations from the face without injury to either texture or color of the skin. His success in this, as in every department of his specialty—Diseases of the SCALP and LOSS OF HAIR—will warrant him in guaranteeing a Cure in every case. The American Sporting View of the Ring and Bloomer Fight—British Ring Play Indicted.

Since the subsidence of our great campaign of steel, and in the midst of the tranquil temper to which the country has resigned itself during the pending pause of arms, we are suddenly treated to a first-class sensation from the other side of the Atlantic. HEENAN has been whipped by KING, and British injustice has again signalized itself against an American in the prize ring.

Engrossed in the grander subject of the war, and lifted to the level of superior thought, our people had almost ignored the humbler fortunes of the Benicia Boy, and, riveted on military splendor, had for a long time steadily refused to take an active interest in anything which he might do. Besides, and apart from the claims of our softer preoccupation, the foolish fellow has lost caste among us by his course in England, and by forgetting the cause which had once invested him with no much dignity. Instead of continuing to shelter the dust of England from his feet, for having been denied the belt he had forced its famous champion to lay down, he meanly went back at the temptation of a few dollars, to assimilate with its population and to further denationalize himself, not only consorting with secessionists, but by conceding to their proclivities, in refusing to fight in the name of his country. These indications, which were foreshadowed here in a card (to MAGH) that he would take no sides in the pending war between the North and South, naturally dulled the public warmth toward him; and, but for the frenzy which came in such sudden volume from the other side, we should have received the late battle very tamely. The very considerations, however, which discounted him with us, won him immense favor in Great Britain, and, being claimed as an Irishman, and accepted as a resident, the last particle of that prejudice which had robbed him of his belt, seemed to have passed from his heroicness forever. Nay, his new friends even went beyond reversion; they adopted him as one of themselves, and even increased the estimation we had modestly sent him over at odd four to six as against Tom SAYERS, by raising him to six against four, over an equally thorough Englishman in the person of Tom KING.

Whatever of mortification, therefore, that accrues from his defeat lodges entirely against Englishmen, for it doubtlessly was made this match, put up the money, and consequently confessing his victory over SAYERS, yet, through the odds, his market value as a bruiser. And we are glad to be able to add, it is they also—we mean those who laid these odds—who have felt the recurring plague of the Farnboro invasion. Tom SAYERS, in whose behalf the ring was there broken in, could, from his new stand-point, appreciate the dismay of the Americans on that occasion, and feel, as he saw KING saved by the "roughs" at the 18th round, that every outrage is its own avenger. As HEENAN's backer, he should have stopped the fight just there; but the brave fellow, reasoning doubtless from himself, thought there was still pluck enough left in the Benician to finish off a game and honest adversary, and then avoid a wrangle and a draw. But SAYERS appears not to have known his man, and mortifying as the acknowledgment may seem, we are bound to recognize the fact that from this point HEENAN's heart evidently died him. Undoubtedly it was the vision of Farnboro reproduced that appalled him, and he clearly saw he would not be allowed to win. But during the earlier portion of the fight he had not shown too much of courage. His opening tactics were unworthy of his powers, and the manner in which he brooded over the blows of the eighth round, and sought thereafter to run in, out of the thundering rain to the wrestling hug, was anything but creditable. Superior in strength and "action," he seemed to be afraid to venture on a game of blows, and, aside from the injustice done him by the much and it must be admitted, even by his warmest friends, that in this fight at least, he succumbed without having been injured in his hands, and without having been touched by any one but KING—who, after all, fought just as many rounds as he. Superior in bulk, main strength, alertness and accomplishment, had he been KING's equal in determination, he must have secured at least a "draw," for so long as the crowd permitted no one else to touch him, no more physical inferior could possibly have fought him down. A thoroughly game man, supported by such seconds as MCMANUS and Tom SAYERS, instead of being discouraged, should only have become enraged, and, with new resolution springing from injustice, have forced the partisans of his opponents to a still greater issue. Not having done so, but having from this moment sunk away, we cannot resist the conviction that he was ultimately beaten through a defective firmness of purpose.

Though HEENAN had power and qualities which charter him to vanquish any man alive, we sincerely believe he will never win a battle which requires the highest description of endurance. Mercurial and sensitive, he can nonplus and to immense performance; but confront him with unexpected evils and he becomes instantly disconcerted, and unless peculiarly supported, is demonstrably in danger of dying on the effort. That was the case in his fight with MCMANUSH, whom he once beat out of time, just as he did both SAYERS and KING; but both MCMANUSH and KING, after they had escaped the crisis to which they had been driven by his unwonted powers, returned upon him, and without the help of any other arms each readily took him captive. It is for these reasons, though he is by no means a coward, we consider him unfitted for his trade. These times victorious, not once has he been a winner, and should he fight ten times more, he will never come from the ring a conqueror, unless he has capable assistance near at hand to wisely watch the contest, and at the proper moment land the game. In this fight with KING, it was supposed the odds in his favor would restore their usual office, and protect him with a majority of partisans, but unfortunately his backers were mostly among the gentry, while those who supported KING were, in large part, cosmopolitan, all of whom, of course, were present. The action of the odds was, therefore, for this time, inverted, and operated only as a largess, to rivet a preconceived and villainous intention.

The exigencies which grew out of plots like these, demand the resistance of the stoutest natures. Pugilism is inexorable in its requirement of pluck. The giant who is faint in purpose, has an enemy within his bosom, and fights two combatants instead of one. A perturbation at the seat of strength discounts propulsion and confounds the thought; while, on the other hand, a sturdy nature is sustained by instinct, and delivers with an intelligence and a directness, superior to all other lawes of art. It was the knowledge of this quality in KING which partly induced his backers to support him; it was perhaps a doubt of the same quality in HEENAN, which added to that confidence; though it must be confessed that all England, like ourselves, thought well of him in that respect. It is no discredit to the judgment of any of us if we have been mistaken. Nature has strange caprices, and is sometimes very recondite. It takes so much pleasure often in misleading us as to the courage of a military chieftain like GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN, as to the pluck of a boxer like JOHN CARMEL HEENAN. We may be obliged to receive the one for a long time on the grandiloquent scale of his pronunciamentos, and while the admeasurements of a tape line round the other may give us the proportions of an Achilles, we unfortunately cannot see through his bulk, and sensitive the core of his heart. It may be considered a wanton piece of cruelty to the defeated prize-fighter that we should thus reproach him for putting him in parallel with the strategist of Yorktown, but public men are the property of history, and the intelligent will justify us by the fact that the discomfited Benician shines advantageously beside the General. The generous will pardon him for those efforts which went to the extent of his nature, and the most begrudging cannot fail to certify that he, at least, has been in battle.

It may seem strange that we can find such deficiency in HEENAN, in face of his fortitude during his long tournament with SAYERS. That fight, according to the English journals, was the gamest ever fought in Britain; and we can bear personal witness that we saw HEENAN knock SAYERS down twenty-seven times; but we also bear in mind how the Benician was sustained on that occasion. There were close at his back a handful of fierce men whom he dreaded ten times more than he did the blows of SAYERS; and, in front, he had the mocking eye of MCMANUSH, who had come across the seas in the sole hope to see him whipped.

Besides, life had not then been made too luxurious to HEENAN by the blandishments of the Haymarket, and he consequently brought a more rugged nature to the combat. But even in that contest, there were those of his friends who thought him short in resolution that he did not launch all his thunders on the champion, when, early in the fight, he succeeded in disabling his most formidable arm. It is true, he fought that battle according to the instructions of his seconds, and it was purposely prolonged by one of them, to win the wagers made on an hour's fighting; but an instinctive pugilist, seeing his opportunity, should have discarded orders, and carried the victory by storm. With KING, HEENAN unquestionably fought to suit himself; and having adopted the "hurricane" method, as he did with MCCLEERY, and by it having driven his opponent beyond the verge of consciousness, it was the fault of his seconds that he did not gain the victory.

It was not, however, entirely their fault, but the fault largely of British ruffians who broke in the ring, and most largely of all, the fault of the referee, who sanctioned the villainy by his administration. It may be said that the action of these wretches in behalf of KING as of those in behalf of SAYERS, does not represent upon the British public. So we agree, but the authority of the referee involves the morals of the better classes, and its approval by the British journals makes the crime common to the nation. It was the act of ruffians till the referee forgave it, and it remained, even then, an individual and limited piece of villainy, until the London Times, leading off the British press, actually assumed that the invasion at the ring proceeded from the irrepressible sympathy of the "low-browed ruffians" in KING's corner to work upon the supposed dead body of their hero. These sentimental misogynists, whose fellows, in an earlier portion of the report, were thought by the Times writer not fit to be seen "out of sandwiches," were, it is at a pinch to be the auxiliaries of its principles, and to figure as sentimental saints. Bell's Life, however, as befits the organ which found the referee, sounds the base string of perfidy. This is the organ which furnished the referee for Farnboro, which made out HEENAN to be an Irishman, and scouted (when it was supposed he would be winner) at the absurdity of any one pretending this would be an "international" battle. It now sneers at "the Americans," and, as befits the journal which has twice betrayed him, does not report that portion of the battle in which its compounded villainy was done. In the Farnboro fight DOYLE pretended to be swayed off by the crowd, and not to see the ruffians handling HEENAN upon the back and arms while lawfully holding SAYERS till his seconds threw up the sponge; and those rounds he did not report. In this latter fight, Bell's instrument and representative condoned the outrage, and then pretended, like his predecessor, that such was the confusion, he saw nothing more. His report, at any rate the only one which has yet reached this country, steps at the seventeenth round on this excuse, while all the others go closely to the end.

We thought DOWLING's conduct at the first was as bad as could be, and his manufacture of an ex-post facto rule against hugging on the ropes themselves in the extreme; but SAYERS exceeds him, by interfering with HEENAN at the end of the very first round, and warns him that he must not hold and punish his man in the centre of the ring. Thus is the time out of mind "chancery" practice of the English ring disposed of in a breath when it works toward the victory of an American, and the system of CARNE, SPRING, BURGESS, WARD and GOLLY utterly ignored, rather than an Englishman should give in. It is no wonder, when such rulings as these can be uttered in an English ring, that the humbler amendants of the sport indulge themselves so generally in picking pockets. The lesson we are taught by these things, and by their incorporation in the British press is, that an American need expect no justice in a public contest in that country, and that without regard to the merits of his case, it is always safe to bet on the Englishman against him.

We would gladly have left this outrage at the door of the ruffians of the ring, as we did frankly in the case of SAYERS, but the action of Bell's referee, and the sympathetic indorsement of the remainder of the British press, gives it a general stamp. We thought they were honestly ashamed of their conduct in the matter of the Champion's belt, which HEENAN knocked fairly out of its possessor's grips, and which they had not the manliness to give him; but their toleration of the furlough given by the mob to KING is a proof that they have not the least sense of justice nor respect for fair play where their prejudices are concerned. They are, therefore, welcome to such a victory as they have won. The match was of their own making; the estimation put on HEENAN's merits were mainly of English manufacture, and if they have used it up after their own fashion, it is their affair entirely, and not ours. As for HEENAN, as he wished to stake everything on this trial, and invited obloquy in case he lost, he may abide by his misfortunes on his own philosophy. He has for the last four years occupied more attention than a conquering monarch, and, not being marked with extra noble qualities, it is well he should give place to some fresher figure.

If that figure in England should be TOM KING, there ought to be no one to regret it. He is the sole person who comes out of this most disgraceful muddle entirely unsullied. It may be said, so far as he is concerned, he gained the victory fairly on his merits, and that in his triumph the best man won. Modest, brave, loyal to his backers, he went into his task duly impressed with the gravity of the performance. He did not allow himself to be discouraged because he got a few hard thumps about the head, or even because he was knocked into a trance; but, facing danger always, fought it out and through it, like a dutiful young fellow, brought safely back to his friends, the large sum with which they had intrusted him. That was the result of pluck, and we say all credit to him.

A Gift to the Retiring Mayor.

Probably no more expressive compliment could be paid to a public man than the one yesterday afternoon paid to Hon. GEORGE OPDYKE. About 5 o'clock, when His Honor was immersed in business, all the attaches of his office "skedaddled," and he was left alone in his glory. They repaired to the parlor of (Mr. ROCKS, Keeper of the City Hall, who courteously surrendered his sec, and City Marshal Brown, by order, returned to the Mayor's office, and summoned his Honor before those who for two years have been most pleasantly associated with him. The secret had been well kept, and the surprise was entire. His Honor was promptly addressed on his appearance, by one of the clerks of his office, in behalf of twelve assembled associates, and an acknowledgment made of the pleasure of the Association, and of the uniform courtesy, kindness and consideration which had marked his relations with them. Reference was made to his official career as defying criticism or investigation; and the hopeful a long and happy future were expressed, accompanied by the gift of a superbly mounted ebony cane, heavily gold-headed. The head has four tablets, each very admirably engraved, beside the top, on which in most artistic style is the City seal; one tablet bears the figure of Justice, another the symbol of commerce, another a representation of the City Hall, and the last a modest inscription, with the names of the donors. It is a most beautiful, costly and artistic piece of work, by the house TIFFANY & CO., and it can safely be said that with all their taste and skill they have never excelled it. Mayor OPDYKE received the gift with unconcealed surprise and equally unconcealed gratification, responding to the address in a most cordial, hearty and appreciative speech. As he is about retiring from office, and can confer no further political favors, there is a similitude and sincerity in the motive of this present which any public man might recognize with pride and gratification.

Business Statistics of the Year.

In reviewing the business statistics of the past year, Messrs. R. G. DUN & Co., Mercantile Agency, Broadway, present the following summary, showing "a largely diminished number of failures in business for the past year as compared with the preceding one, and a remarkable decrease when compared with the average number in a normal condition of the country. This is accounted for chiefly by the check given to speculation, the heavy rise in prices of goods, and the disposition shown by merchants, in view of the uncertain prospect the future presented, to profit by the opportunities afforded, and place themselves in shape to meet any emergency. The number of failures has diminished in uniform ratio throughout the Northern and Western States, and, as our object in publishing the comparative table has always been to show how the different sections were variously affected, the present harmonious prosperity in these States renders the items in detail of less value. We have, however, carefully examined our records, with the following result:

New-York City and Brooklyn	$7,491,000	$3,035,000
Philadelphia	1,310,000	472,000
Boston	1,615,000	1,133,000
Balance Northern States	12,236,000	4,359,000
British Provinces	2,397,888	2,565,000
Total Northern States and British Provinces	$25,341,888	$16,467,000

Our list of failures embraces those only in the legitimate line of trade, and does not include speculators in Gold, Stocks, Produce, &c. The large number of Houses that have, from various causes, either failed or ceased business in the prominent cities since the war began, has left the trade in the hands of comparatively few, whose ample means enabled them to lay in their stocks in the beginning of the year at low figures. The rapid advance in price of all merchandise, with a steady, but not excessive demand, has made the year's business a more than usually profitable one to importers and jobbers, while the purchases have not been on so large a scale as in peace ful times, the enhanced value of goods has increased the amount beyond precedent. The retail trade has been equally prosperous. The suggestions made by us in our last annual Circular have been, in the main, carried out, and the confidence we expressed. If such should be the case, of a good year's business, has been fully realized. Stocks of merchandise of all kinds, are comparatively light, and business generally in a healthy and prosperous condition. There has been but little disposition to speculate by regular traders. The producing interests of the country have not shown a disposition to expand. The plethora of money and the high prices of produce have enabled them to clear themselves of all indebtedness; hence the country merchant has been enabled to buy either for cash or on short credit. It is, therefore, to be assumed that with these flattering prospects, the producing and country merchant, having a surplus of funds seeking investment, will operate in undue speculations, which may result in locking up their valuable means, and in the great and disastrous reaction to prove disastrous. It will be well, therefore, for jobbers to keep well informed as to the movements of their customers the coming year."

Annual Domestic Ball at the Astor House.

THE OLD YEAR DANCED OUT AND THE NEW YEAR DANCED IN.

That the "domestic relations" of the Astor House are of the most amicable character possible none will deny who had the pleasure of being present last evening on the occasion of the grand annual ball of the domestics of that establishment. Joy was unconfined, and the dance went on until 1864 became a recognized date. The evening's entertainment commenced in the large dining-room by a speech from JOHN E. DEVLIN, Esq., which was replied to by Col. TROY, formerly engineer of the Astor House, but now a soldier in the Army of the Potomac.

about 8 o'clock dancing began, which was kept up until 11½, when the party—about 300 in number—adjourned to the supper-table, which was spread with such luxuries as the Astor House ever provides. After supper, dancing was resumed, and concluded about 2 o'clock. Thus were happy hours spent, such as it is the good fortune of such men as Mr. STETSON to afford.

Among the distinguished guests present were, Col. James Tray, Gen. Thomas, Hon. J. Devlin, Capt. Meyer, J. C. Hobson, Daniel J. Tenney, William H. Wallace, Gen. De Witt C. Clark, G. Swan, Esq., Col. A. M. C. Stetson, S. J. Dennis, Gen. Charles A. Stetson, Peter A. Borden, Col. Lesser, Capt. Lawrence, E. R. Bebb, C. R. Connolly, and M. Knapp. Messrs. Troy, McGlancery and Wood acted as floor managers. It may not be considered invidious to say that Mrs. LALLEY was pronounced the belle of the room. Take it all in all the ball of the domestics of the Astor House may be chronicled as one full of enjoyment and a complete success.

United States Passports—Important to Travelers.

Citizens of the United States visiting foreign countries are liable to serious inconvenience, if unprovided with authentic proof of their national character, and although the recent regulations requiring masters and owners of vessels leaving this port to obtain papers from the United States Marshal do not make it incumbent on each passenger to provide himself with such a permit, yet the best safeguard of a traveler abroad is a passport from the Department of State, certifying the bearer to be a citizen of the United States, and entitled to all lawful aid and protection. Loyal citizens may obtain such passports without unnecessary delay, by applying to ARRIC. WILLMARTH, at the United States District Clerk's Office, No. 41 Chambers-street, who is provided with the necessary forms of application, and duly authorized to prepare and forward the same to the State Department at Washington.

The Frigate Niagara Ordered to Hampton Roads.

The steam-frigate Niagara, now lying off the Battery, has been ordered to send half her crew on board Admiral FARRAGUT's flagship Hartford, and then proceed to Hampton Roads for the Winter thus virtually putting out of commission one of the finest ships in the navy. She was refitted and her armament changed at Boston last Fall, and has since been among the fishermen on the coast, and more recently at Halifax, whence she sailed for this port. Her armament originally consisted of 12 11-inch guns mounted as pivot guns on the spar deck. In the changes which were made she received twelve additional guns of the same calibre, besides several rifles. Being built to carry only twelve, the additional weight of her armament, together with the increased quantity of ammunition she was required to carry, sunk her so low in the water that she became unmanageable. Indeed, it is asserted that so useless was her armament of heavy Dahlgrens that she might have been captured by the Alabama had she met that vessel with an ordinary sea running. Even in mild weather and a moderate sea it has been found impossible to cast loose an 11-inch pivot gun, and work it without endangering the lives of the men. The lower deck ports of the Niagara being only two feet out of water, it would have been equally impossible to have opened them without subjecting the ship to the imminent risk of being foundered. In fact, on her trip from Halifax, although she encountered no severe weather, it was found necessary to caulk her lower ports, and even then the sea frequently swept her decks. So this splendid ship is reported to be really as harmless at sea, for all purposes of war, as an unarmed merchant vessel, owing to the excessive weight and number of her guns.

"A happy New Year" is very pleasant and desirable, but to secure it, it is indispensable that sunshine should gladden the home as well as the street. Some men complain of the want of domestic sunshine, but if they do not have it, to be sure it is their own fault. They make no effort to obtain it. Not so with those who KNOX has beautiful furs, which he is selling cheap, and wishes she had a set, the husband positively prides himself on—not taking the hints, and allowing her to suffer with the cold. Does he deserve domestic sunshine? Of course not. The crowd of good-looking, amiable, liberal men, however, who now, more than ever, throng KNOX's popular establishment, shows that such cross, cranky persons are the exception rather than the rule. It is a well-known fact that a set of the famous KNOX furs, a KNOX hat muff or carriage robe, will purchase more parlor or kitchen sunshine than the same amount of money invested in any other way. The happy effect lasts for years, in fact, as long as the furs last, and ever leave a tender and affectionate memory behind them. Not only does the happy wife feel grateful for so useful and thoughtful a gift, but she appreciates more highly than ever the taste and liberality which made a selection from an establishment prepared for the style and quality of its goods. The "KNOX" mark is a guarantee of fashion and excellence, and a close inspection bears out even the most extravagant anticipations. A KNOX hat is now considered indispensable to the complete dress of a gentleman on New-Year's Day, and a set of the KNOX furs will soon be as necessary to the full costume of a lady upon the promenade. Any lady suspecting her husband of an intention to "surprise" her, or desirous of surprising him with a handsome gift, will find precisely what she wants in the celebrated KNOX Skating Set—gloves, cap and collar—at No. 212 Broadway, corner of Fulton-st.
